I am struck by his energy without rant -by an accent free from Engand provincialism—by his liberal Catholic spirit and, above all, by his freedom from the vulgar clap-trap manner which has been attributed to him.

There is nothing in this sermon, at least, which can offend good taste, though his desscriptive powers, which are of high order, less him occasionally into striking, and end nim occasions, situations. Speaking the wiles of the Devil, he tells us, that, the wiles of the is constantly committing enarkable mistakes. (I think he is going instance the shutting up of John Bunyan Bedford jail, but he does'nt.) Once, he sars in the days of the Apostles, the Gospel kept its banks, until the Devil, envious of its progress, took up that great mountain, Peraction, and dashed it in the bed of the little stream, to stay it. But, what was the psalt! The puny stream was splashed into a thousand rills, which, swelling into rivers, anited in a mighty stream, which ran broad and deep into all lands, and down all time, until time shall be no longer. Speaking of the discouragement the Christian feels at the monuance of temptations and evil thoughts, gier, as he supposed, a thorough change of eart had taken place, the preacher tells the pe ple it always was so, and always will be, that the Dog of Hell should still be on the track of the child of God, with his fangs at he hels, barking and worrying all down the path of life—down the bank of the deep, lark river—his very feet are in the water. But, says the preacher, clasping his hands with sudden energy, "Thank God! the Dog

Tobacco Growing in Fauquier.

Observing in the Gazette, that some eagerss is manifested by a few of the farmers Fauquier and Rappahannock to enter upthe culture of Tobacco, I have thought that a few words of caution might be worth smething to them, before they progress too H. Robinson. far in their preparations.

This question should be very carefully weighed in all its bearings before being inally determined on, and no one inexperisaced in the culture of the crop can deternine it judiciously for himself. Thousands might be expended in buildings and other preparations, besides great expenditure in abor which would have been more profitably ment on other crops, before the tyro planter assovers that neither his farm or force is adapted to its growth. Among other things t is indispensable to success that the farm should embrace a sufficiency of what is known to planters as "Tobacco soil," to make at least four (five is better) shifts .-This land must be not only of loose, friable nature, but must have the capacity to produce from 10 to 12 bbls, of corn to the acre, with a clover crop at least two years old: such and, with the aid of from $8 to $10 worth if suitable fertilizers per acre may produce sprofitable crop. Small and poor Tobacco for shipping is becoming annually more unsaleable in the English market, besides being one of the least remunerative of all

No farmer will find the crop remuneraire who cannot command at least double the force necessary for ordinary crops of wheat and corn which his farm will bear. Again he will require about double the quanany of wood land (to burn his plant beds and cure the crop for a number of years) that he would need without the crop. His wood land must likewise contain an abunfance of what is technically called "plant and." He must have his houses all built before the cutting season, and the value of the first crop will be pretty well consumed in the buildings necessary to house it. He most inevitably get an overseer from the Toacro region, who comes well recommended an experienced and successful planter, and to his guidance and judgment he must submit. He must give up all schemes for conomising labor, and taking "near cuts," en kinds of tobacco, &c., until he shall have served his apprenticeship, and made up his mind to do more than double the work he tier did, in the same time. We are rejoiced to know that our article of vesterday, appealing to the religious and ousiness community, is having the desired effect. The City of Philadelphia is rapidly becoming a focus for Abolition lecturers and Abolition conspiracies. A prominence is thus being given to her which renders her odious to the South, and to all right thinking and truly Christian and patriotic men. Her business is thereby injured, as well as her fair red 125c. There have been a few arrivals of reputation for patriotism, and reverence for the law of the land. Not a property owner, mand is less pressing, but still active, and we have not a business man, not a manufacturer, not no change to note in quotations, viz: 95c. for a mechanic, not an artist, not a laborer, nor white. Rye also continues in good demand, and dealer of any kind whatever, but is pecuniarily interested in removing this odium which now rests upon the fair fame of this City, an incubus as disgraceful as it is paralyzing .-We hope, therefore, that some union, and some expression of public sentiment may be had on the subject of slavery agitation, which will forever silence those in our midst, and prevent those from without from unjustly making us responsible for their traitorous and murderous plots against the rights and property of our Southern brethren. ALEXANDRIA-HER RESOURCES, TRADE, &c. -There are but few places in the country that have greater natural advantages for trade and commerce, than the ancient borough of Alexandria. Located on the Potomac, one of the noblest streams in the world, at a point navigable to the largest vessels, she has every facility for external commerce; and, now, since she has been put into intimate connection with a large extent of back country by means of her numerous railroad connections, she must ere long attain to the highest rank among her sister cities. What ly demanded. but want of enterprise among her citizens, can prevent her from becoming a great and pros-perous place? We can conceive of nothing. She is now extending her arms out in every direction, and grasping the rich treasures of commerce that lie within her reach, and by means of these, she is yet destined to become great and prosperous. Indeed, but few cities are so blessed as Alexandria now is. Situated, as we have said, on tide-water, on the plaeid Potomac that bears to her wharves the noblest vessels that plow the main, she has but few rivals as to capacity for external trade. But in her internal resources she is still more blessed. She will soon be in direct connection by railroad with the extreme southwest. She is now, we may say, in direct connection with Richmond, by two routes. She will soon be in railroad nection, by the Manassas road, with the counties of the middle Valley; and it will not be long till she is connected by the Alexandria, Loudoun & Hampshire road with the lower Valley, and even with Western Virginia. And lastly, she is connected with Washington and the North, both by railroad and by water. Now, contrast the advantages of Alexandria, if you will, with those of most of our great cities, and see how they compare. They are as great as those of Philadelphia, and infinitely greater than those of Baltimore. Then why should not Alexandria be a place of vast business? should not her merchants be enabled to compete, and that successfully in the purchase and sale of goods with any northern city? Why should she not be enabled to sell goods just as low as they do? If her facilities for trade are as great-if her location is as good—if her people are as enterprising, why should she not be encouraged by the patronage of our people? It is as plain as the noon-day sun, that it is their interest to patronise their own cities, if what they need can be had there on as good terms as it can be had elsewhere; and if their interest, their duty. Will the people look into this matter? Will they ponder on it, and then go and do their duty? - Virginia Citizen, (Rock'm. Co.)

Most of the readers of the Register know that the people of Alexandria will soon be near at hand when we shall breakfast at home and dine at one of the most excellent hotels to be found here. THE POTOMAC .- The present condition of the river, above the Long Bridge, is thus described in the admirable report made in February, 1857, to the Secretary of the Interior by Alfred L. Rives, esq., Civil Engineer. See House Ex. Doc. No. 68, 2d sess.

"A complete hydrographic survey, extending a distance of six miles-from the island rocks, called the Three Sisters, (a half mile above Georgetown,) to Geesborough Point, (one mile below the Arsenal)-estab lishes conclusively that some improvement in the actual state of the river is imperative-

The depth of the Potomac at the Three Sisters is eighty-four feet, and thence to a quarter of a mile below Easby's wharf varies from twenty-one to thirty-three feet. Below that point the current spreads itself over an immense surface, gradually losing its Powers, Sardinia, Spain, Sweden, Portugal, energy, until that channel presents a depth Naples and Rome will be represented in the of only ten feet at mean and eight at extra- European Congress. ordinary low tides. As the tide rises only three feet, this depth is wholly inadequate for the purposes of navigation. Farther on, tracts the current that we again find a depth of thirty-two feet. Below the Long Bridge there exists two channels-the Georgetown or Virginia, and the Washington or city Branch exert their beneficial influence on the latter. After the junction of the two channels, the water attains a depth of fifty-

For the improvement of the Georgetown or Virginia channel the Board of Aldermen passed an act last Monday evening, appropriating five thousand dollars, with the understanding that Georgetown would provide a like amount. We presume the Board of Common Council will likewise pass this act, and that the Mayor will both approve it and cause it to be promptly executed.

large number regarding it as conducing to the building up of other interests at their expense, which is no doubt to some extent true. And yet, if it be impracticable at present to undertake the improvement of the Washington channel, we are quite willing for present purposes to advocate the improvement of the other, presuming that the people of Georgetown will meet us in the our next door neighbors, as the time is same liberal spirit, and do what they can to render our expenditures remunerative to us as well as to themselves. This they have the power to do if so inclined.
